Harborfields High is Named "Reward School"

I want to congratulate the students, teachers, and families from the Harborfields High School for being named a "Reward School." This well-deserved honor recognizes their extraordinary academic achievements.

Harborfields High School is among 24 Long Island schools that were named "Reward Schools" last Thursday by the New York State Education Department. The schools that received the honor have demonstrated high academic achievement or the most progress in the state and do not have significant gaps in student achievement between subgroups including students from families of low income.

As Legislator of this community and a father of three of their students, I am proud to see our local high school exemplify academic excellence and putting the value of education as a top priority. I commend the students of Harborfield High School and encourage them to keep up all the good work!

~Legislator "Doc" Spencer
